

have
and tion
on ford
en-
ity:
ful

go,
rea,
dd,
ack
ars
all
ho
is
de,
and
ek,
ils,
ed
ted
ing
a

ook
and
feet
by verti-
fit-
land
pains
dago

FL

ge of
on the S.W.
fects.

anim-
two
NCE.
ers of
rib
a co-

un-
sub-
ado

ent of
in the dubills,
spatch.
favet
erat, in respec-

"Where Liberty dwells, there is my Country."--Franklin.

BY J. CALHOUN.

CHICAGO, ILL. TUESDAY NOV. 26, 1833.

VOL. I. NO. 1.

IN THE FAR WEST.

BY EDWARD HUNT, AND MEET. WITH THE SIOUX.

Following interesting account of a recent meeting between the Sioux and Foxes, as related from the St. Louis, and was translated as told by Ke-o-kuck, a warrior of the latter tribe.

Ke-o-kuck, a warrior of the Sioux, came to the city, to make a visit. For this purpose, Ke-o-kuck, started, early in the morning, on his journey, and arrived at the city, on the 26th of the month.

After leaving their village, Buffalo, and immediately after their departure. On the 26th of the month, the party were sent out to meet the Sioux, who were expected to arrive on the 26th of the month.

After leaving their village, Buffalo, and immediately after their departure. On the 26th of the month, the party were sent out to meet the Sioux, who were expected to arrive on the 26th of the month.

After leaving their village, Buffalo, and immediately after their departure. On the 26th of the month, the party were sent out to meet the Sioux, who were expected to arrive on the 26th of the month.

After leaving their village, Buffalo, and immediately after their departure. On the 26th of the month, the party were sent out to meet the Sioux, who were expected to arrive on the 26th of the month.

After leaving their village, Buffalo, and immediately after their departure. On the 26th of the month, the party were sent out to meet the Sioux, who were expected to arrive on the 26th of the month.

After leaving their village, Buffalo, and immediately after their departure. On the 26th of the month, the party were sent out to meet the Sioux, who were expected to arrive on the 26th of the month.

After leaving their village, Buffalo, and immediately after their departure. On the 26th of the month, the party were sent out to meet the Sioux, who were expected to arrive on the 26th of the month.

vancing to shake hands with him. One of them seized his whip, which had been fastened to his wrist by a string, and attempted to drag him from his horse. Fortunately the string broke, and he regained his saddle. They had previously secured his horse by the bridle. Finding himself in this critical situation, he rose in his stirrups, and smiting his breast, told them his name was Ke-o-kuck! repeated Ke-o-kuck! His companions were also surrounded. In glancing his eye around he discovered a gun presented at him! He then exerted all his force to extricate his horse, but in vain. A reinforcement had joined the Sioux, and he perceived another gun was raised at him in the rear. He now began to think that he would fall a sacrifice, finding resistance useless. At this moment the two young Braves, who had been stationed on the hill charged at full gallop upon the Sioux, who gave way before them, retiring backwards with their guns cocked. Ke-o-kuck and his companions wheeled off in the best manner they could, keeping their faces towards the enemy. Ke-o-kuck called to them: "We wish to make peace!" The Sioux replied: "Meet us at this place tomorrow for council." Ke-o-kuck responded: "We will." They soon reached the high ground, wheeled their horses, and took a view of the Sioux as they retired. They discovered that the whole party of Sioux warriors had advanced against them, and were then slowly returning to their camp.

As they were returning home, Ke-o-kuck requested his faithful companions to explain to the chiefs and warriors what had taken place. Just as the sun was setting they reached their encampment, but not without having been discovered previously whilst yet at a distance from Ke-o-kuck's favourite wife had, contrary to orders, and unknown to the camp, mounted a swift horse, and gone in pursuit, and returned in advance, giving the news of their success and coming. All the warriors were prepared to receive them. They came in full speed—Ke-o-kuck passed on above to the further end of the camp to his own lodge—threw himself from his horse, and was immediately surrounded by his wives and children.

His companions related to the chiefs and warriors what had taken place, and said: "We are requested by Ke-o-kuck to say that whatever you may determine upon he is ready to execute, but will give no opinion." The chiefs and warriors determined upon meeting the Sioux in council, as Ke-o-kuck had promised them, the next day; and sent a young warrior to inform him of their resolution, and to congratulate him upon his success.

At day break, next morning, Ke-o-kuck was mounted on horseback, mustering his warriors; and in a short time the whole party were ready, and took up the line of march towards the Sioux camp, with all their women and children. When they arrived at the camp, they discovered that the Sioux warriors were waiting for them, and that the women and children were also present.

The warriors gave their looking glasses to the women and boys, mounted them on their horses, and manoeuvred so as to show a strong force. Ke-o-kuck, the chiefs, braves and warriors advanced. After crossing the creek, he halted them, and advanced with the chiefs, but reflecting that the Sioux might fire upon them, and kill all their chiefs, they being drawn up in order of battle, he requested the chiefs to halt, and advanced alone towards the Sioux camp. As I before stated, he was well mounted on a proud charger, that pranced and showed his rider to great advantage. On his near approach, he discovered that the advance line of Sioux warriors were painted black—and when about fifty yards off, the Sioux fired their guns in the air, grounded their arms, and threw down their powder horns. The Sioux chief advanced alone to meet Ke-o-kuck, and shook hands. They were old acquaintances, having been to Washington city together. The whole party of Sioux now rushed up to shake hands with Ke-o-kuck, and his chiefs and warriors, who had all come up. The Sioux women running with their children on their backs, calling aloud: "We have made peace with the Sioux."

A large space had been cleared off by the Sioux for the reception of the Sioux and Foxes—when they motioned them to range themselves in line, whilst the Sioux did the same. The high priest, or master of ceremonies, proceeded to the fire in the middle of the square, cut a slice of flesh from a roasted dog, went to the Sioux chief, and calling upon the Great Spirit to witness the sincerity of their hearts in making peace, placed it in his mouth. He then proceeded to Ke-o-kuck, and went through the same ceremony—and continued alternately, giving to the Sioux and Sacs and Foxes, until all had partaken of the favorite token of conciliation—after which they were treated with a feast of buffalo meat and marrow bones—shook hands and parted.

Ke-o-kuck and his party returned to the creek, where the women and children had arrived and made their encampment. The Sioux warriors paid them a visit, and danced round their camp in a menacing manner. The Sacs warriors folded their arms, and looked on with contempt on their movements. The Sioux returned to their camp, when their chief and two of his followers paid a visit to Ke-o-kuck and the chiefs in the evening.

Early next morning Ke-o-kuck and all his warriors, fully equipped and mounted, made a rush upon the Sioux camp—surrounded it, and displayed feats of horsemanship—daring their spears as it in battle—then dismounted, and commenced a dance. The Sioux promised to keep the peace four years. The Sacs and Foxes consented to make peace, but did not stipulate the time. The Sioux broke up their camp, and started to the west to their hunting grounds. The Sacs and Foxes returned to their former encampment, and remained until they had killed eighty buffalo, and then came back to their villages.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

and displayed feats of horsemanship—daring their spears as it in battle—then dismounted, and commenced a dance. The Sioux promised to keep the peace four years. The Sacs and Foxes consented to make peace, but did not stipulate the time. The Sioux broke up their camp, and started to the west to their hunting grounds. The Sacs and Foxes returned to their former encampment, and remained until they had killed eighty buffalo, and then came back to their villages.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Rock Island, August, 1833.

Illinois and Michigan Rail Road.—This subject appears to arrest the attention of many citizens of late, and a strong desire is manifested to carry into execution the long contemplated improvement. The agitation of this question now, is probably owing in part, to the rapid emigration to that section of country north of the Illinois river, and the practicality of making the northern route the channel for the transportation of merchandise, which now can be made at a cheaper rate, in less time, and with greater certainty than by the way of New Orleans. The want of a rail road from lake Michigan to the Illinois river, must soon be very sensibly felt, as that section of the state is increasing in population to a degree unparalleled in the history of any country. With these facts before us, we should lose no time in making necessary preparations for the construction of so important a work, and which is likely to be of so much benefit not only to this state, but to the whole western country. If the state have not the means sufficient to justify her to commence the work upon her own footing, they are at hand, and may be applied to that of a right course is taken to obtain them. There is but little doubt that capital in abundance can be procured, upon equitable terms, to carry on the improvement to its final completion, in the course of two or three years; whereas, if delay be made until the state becomes able to meet the expense from her own resources, possibly only one benefited.

As to the practicality of calling a session of the legislature for that purpose, as has been urged by the citizens of Chicago, we think will not be questioned, provided some method be proposed that would be likely to meet the objection of a majority; for at the last session the "rail-road" bill, which was then thought to be the best in our power, was then received very violent opposition in both branches of the legislature, particularly in the senate, and was finally laid on the table to an indefinite period.

We have understood that the Governor is not averse to calling a session, provided it be called by the people. Public sentiment could be ascertained by the citizens meeting together throughout the state, and making known their views on the subject.

We deem it proper at this time, to lay before the public the sentiments of the governor to the last and present legislature that all may have a fair opportunity to judge of the course which he will pursue in relation to the construction of the contemplated rail-road.

Extract from the Governor's message of 1831.

"The contemplated canal between the Illinois river and lake Michigan, if we regard the mere location of it, is a project within the state, is local; but if we regard the benefits resulting from it to the whole nation, and as a connecting link to the great chain of inland water communication between New Orleans and some of the Atlantic states, it is clearly national. The extent of inland navigation, which will be opened when this canal is completed, will not be equaled in any country; and its benefits will be very generally and extensively felt. The political effect of all such works is also very apparent. They will bring and bind more closely together, the various parts of the extended confederacy. The result of the canal, if completed, will be to place before you; by which you will learn all the important facts connected with that great, and to us the adjoining states, beneficial work. It is evident to my mind, that we have not the means within ourselves for its immediate completion. Nor is there any prospect for the speedy sale of the lands granted by congress to carry out the project. It is, therefore, in my opinion, that a loan should be adopted; and if the legislature should be opposed to loaning money on a moderate interest, I would recommend an application to congress to grant, receivable at the land offices in this state, in exchange for the lands he before granted and remaining unsold. This subject being presented to congress in its proper light, there is no doubt the application will be successful.

As the adjoining states of Indiana and Missouri, have a great interest in the completion of this canal, I would recommend you to invite, respectfully their attention to it, and ask their co-operation in a memorial to congress on the subject."

In 1832 the governor resumed the subject and seemed inclined to the belief that to charter a company with a proper restrictions was the most practicable mode by which the contemplated improvement could be carried into execution, is the following will appear:

"Among other objects of improvement, of paramount interest and importance, which will claim a portion of your consideration, is the long contemplated connexion of the waters of the Illinois river with lake Michigan. This work of such vital consequence not only to the commerce of the west, has been surveyed by successive engineers of unquestionable competency, whose reports are and will be before you; and it is reserved for your wisdom to consummate their labor, and effect the improvement, which will be one of the greatest and most beneficial, of any in the union. You will take under your serious consideration the comparative advantages of the two methods, the rail road and canal, which have been contemplated, for this desirable communication, and decide on their merits. I have no hesitation in saying, if the decision rested with me, I would prefer a rail road. I consider it the only practicable mode of connexion."

"I submit to your wisdom the propriety of chartering a company, with the proper restrictions, for a term of years, to accomplish this work. On principles of equal justice to the public and to the company, stock would be subscribed; and without expense to the state this would be accomplished."—Vandalia Whig.

igrants, arrived in our village, and drove up in front of the market house, in grand style. These emigrants had been about ten weeks on the journey, and enjoyed good health during the time. They design to settle in Sangamon County—to which we bid them welcome.

A few days previous a company of emigrants from Vermont for Green County, passed thro' receiving inhabitants from New York, Ohio, and the Eastern States. Kentucky is pouring out her population upon us—which generally passes over to the military tract. Tennessee also contributes largely to the current emigration; and even some of the wandering ones of Illinois, who were driven off to the Paradise of Arkansas by a certain cold winter, are bending their weary steps back to the sicker land. We calculate that Illinois will increase her number of inhabitants the present season by emigration between 20 and 30,000.—Sangamon Journal.

Singular accident.—On Friday, the 20th inst., a young lady of the Valais, was dressing her hair in the cotton factory of Mr. Baldwin, she accidentally brought it in contact with one of the horizontal iron shafts, which makes 35 revolutions the minute. The shaft is square, 2 1/2 inches in diameter, and is placed 17 inches from the upper floor. The young lady was standing nearly under it, and in toasting over her face, without reflecting that the shaft above her, without reflecting caught fast, and she found herself drawn up towards it with the velocity of lightning. With an extraordinary presence of mind, she grasped the shaft with her hands, at the same time, making an astonishingly violent effort to place her feet upon a dislocation of the neck. She succeeded in clinging to the shaft during two or three revolutions, but its velocity was such as to lengthen to break her hold, and she was projected a distance of eight or ten feet from it, leaving her entire scalp, from the eyebrows of the eye to the third vertebra of the neck, fast in the iron. She fell upon the floor, and proceeded to stop one of the looms which she tended, while the overseers stopped the wheel.

Drs. Miller and Phillip were immediately called, and with the assistance of such as had not fled or fainted from flight, the scalp was laid upon the floor, and the patient conveyed to her room. The scene was truly frightful. The whole head, temple and forehead were peeled to the bone, the blood streaming from the small veins and arteries over her shoulders, and to those who had seen the process of a beautiful lock that formerly adorned her head, she is at present impressed the idea of a headless trunk. Her presence of mind seemed at no time to have forsaken her. She was sitting in a chair when her physicians arrived, and observed that the back of her head was severely bruised, but that she was then or even now conscious of having received the blow, and was in a comfortable condition, and her physicians state, that every symptom indicates a firm recovery of the parts and a speedy recovery of health.—Hudson (N. Y.) Soc.

Gold Region at the North.—It appears from a late Geological Report of Professor Hitchcock, published in the American Journal of Science, that Gold has been found in the southern part of Vermont, and it is confidently expected that it will also be found in Massachusetts.—Balt. Patriot.

How to revive Gilt Frames.—Beat up 3 ounces of white of eggs, with one ounce of chloride of potash or soda, and rub over the frame of the picture in this mixture. The gilding will become immediately bright and fresh.

POWDER PLANT.—About four months ago, Edward Wilcox, Esq. of Westerley, Rhode Island, and late Lt. Governor of that state, received by a sloop from New-York, a leather trunk, with a label attached stating that it came from a relative in this city. Something, however, excited the suspicions of Mr. Wilcox that it was not a friendly present, cautiously raising the lid a very little he discovered cords within, so situated as to strengthen his suspicions. He therefore set the trunk aside, until some young men determined to open it. They cut the cords carefully, and opened the trunk, when it was found to contain two horse pistols, with the muzzles bound in spreads of thirty pounds of powder. The cords were attached to the triggers in such a manner, that if the lid had been raised a few inches, the whole would have exploded, and dreadful must have been the effect. The pistols have been sent to this city, in the hope of tracing out the murderous villain, who, to gratify his malice against an individual, would not only have taken his life, but in all probability the lives of a whole family.—Journal of Commerce.

MORTALITY AMONG PRINTERS.—The mortality among this class of the human race, the present season, was unusually great. The receipt of the last mail brings to our notice, the departure of this life, of no less than seven. Four of whom died in New-Orleans, and three in Natchez. Within the last four or five months three others have died in Natchez, making in all the number six—all young men who had forsaken their homes.—Louis Phœnix.

DELI, DELAWARE COUNTY.—The Circuit Court and Court of Oyer and Terminer at this county, were held in this village last week, his honor Judge Ruggles presiding. The public and to the company, stock would be subscribed; and without expense to the state this would be accomplished."—Vandalia Whig.

Emigrants are coming by thousands into Illinois, and from all quarters of the Union.—On Friday last fifteen large wagons, from St. Lawrence County, N. York, loaded with emigrants, arrived in our village, and drove up in front of the market house, in grand style.

that the plaintiff had committed an assault and battery upon one Lucy Carpenter, (an unmarried female) conducting himself towards her in a lewd and indecent manner. On the trial, the plaintiff proved enough to sustain his action, and the defendant resorted to her justification for a defence. This was made out by Lucy Carpenter, who testified in substance "the facts contained in the defendant's notice of justification."

ANCIENT PAPERS.—A friend has left with us several numbers of the New-England Gazette, published in 1767-68-70. Also the Connecticut Gazette, published at New-London in 1762. The papers are printed on a sheet about the size of common writing paper, with three columns of matter. We intend to make selections from these papers for our collection. The following is from the New-England Gazette of January, 1770:—

"The Committee of Merchants in this town having by last night's Post received a letter from the Committee of Merchants of New-York, wherein it is suggested that I the subscriber, with others, have imported goods from the East Indies, contrary to the agreement of the Merchants, to which I acceded. This is a concern, that I have in one single instance directly or indirectly, derived from said agreement; and I now publicly defy all mankind to prove the CONTRARY. And I am determined to co-operate with the merchants, in every legal and laudable measure, for the redress of the grievances, under which this province and continent have so long labored."

JOHN HANCOCK. Boston, Jan. 4, 1770. A postscript from the same paper says: "The Post is expected to return from the East next Sunday evening."

From the New-England Gazette, published at New-London, Conn. Friday February 6th, 1767. "LONDON, Nov. 15, 1766.—A Certain noble Lord last night, cut five pounds of beef, steak at a supper for a number of fifty guineas, and afterwards retired to his chamber, quite sober, with four bottles of burgundy."

What a fellow this noble Lord would have been for a member of some of our eating clubs of the present day. "Nov. 20.—It is said that the North American will grant and raise a sum equal to what the stamp act would have produced, but that they will do it in their own way, by striking an act among themselves for that purpose."

"New-York, Jan. 28, 1767.—Monday last in the evening, a grand entertainment and ball was given by the gentlemen officers of the city, army, to the ladies and gentlemen of this city, at which, we hear, there was the most numerous and brilliant appearance of both sexes that ever was known in this place."

The following is from the Connecticut Gazette of 1768: "BOSTON, Feb. 27.—Saturday last, six or eight convicts from the county of Hampshire, embarked for the Castle, to be there kept for a longer or shorter space, some for theft, and some for counterfeiting money, among them was the famous BRUNSWICK, who carried a clergyman's watch, and left in its stead the following text: 'Thou shalt seek me, but shall not find me.' We may now add, without applying to the Gazette.—Rome Telegraph.

The Fathers of the West.—Those who know the situation of the Territory beyond the Alleghany mountains fifty years since, cannot be astonished at the unparalleled progress of population and improvement which has been made in that comparatively short space of time. In the fall of 1783 a large party of Kentuckians, under the command we believe of the celebrated Daniel Boone, destroyed the Indian settlements upon the Miami in order to break up the bands that were making continual incursions upon the white settlements south of the Ohio. Upon returning they encamped on the banks of that river, and when they parted to repair to their respective homes, they pledged themselves, that fifty years from that day, the survivors of the company should meet again upon the same spot. The time arrived last night, the meeting was prevented by the prevalence of the cholera. What interest such a meeting would excite! How joyful, yet solemn, would be the assemblage of the grey haired fathers of the west, greeting at the sight of each other before they departed to the land whence there is no returning. The lions of the forest have been swept away. The scream of the panther, the wild whop of the sassafras is no more heard, all is changed save that the booming flood of Ohio still rolls on the "Fathers of waters." Towns and cities, all the improvements of civilized life, overspread the land which to their remembrance, was but a trackless forest, and on the spot where their cotage was made beneath the rude shelter of the forest, has arisen "the Queen of the Western World."

ENCOURAGING READING.—And you go to school, for you are a little nephew, who has a short time before commenced his education. "And you go to school, my little nephew?" "Yes, sir," whispered the boy. "That's right, you'll be a better scholar, I'll warrant—how far are you in your class, my little student?" "Next to the head, sir." "Next to the head say; as you now you desire something for him"—showing four whole cent pieces. "The land of the delighted urchin. And how many are in your class?" "And a little girl."

A person once said to a father, whose son was noted for laziness, that he thought his son was very much afraid of work. "Afraid of work," replied the father, "at all; he will lay down and go to sleep close by the side of it."

NO DOUBT OF IT.—A merchant at N. advertises that he will sell goods at cost above cost; his object being

